Instructions...

I. Description of Project:

The description of project is the only demonstration evaluators have of the substance and quality of the project and its contribution to its own field and scholarship more broadly. Accordingly, the description must include details about the ideas, objectives, and methods of the project. Assertions of need or merit are not helpful.

The project description must not exceed 500 words using a 12-point typeface. The description of the project should address the following questions:

- a) What are the basic ideas, problems, works, or questions the study will examine? What is the planned approach or line of thought? If the area is new to the applicant, what are the reasons for working in it?
- b) There should be a proposed schedule or plan of work that the applicant will follow during the grant (attached separately).
- c) What contribution is the project likely to make to the humanities? Especially in cases where the subject of the study might appear narrow or obscure, the proposal should show the project's larger significance.
- d) For what audience are the results of the study intended? What kind of product is planned?
- e) What is the applicant's competence in the languages needed for the study?
- f) At what location(s) will the applicant conduct the study and what materials will be used?
- g) What is the likelihood of access to archives, collections, or institutions with necessary resources?

II. Proposed uses of fellowship funds, including research travel, photocopying and similar expenses.

*Note: Undergraduate fellows are expected to present their research in informal talks to the UCHI fellows and staff.
